

Woody Guthrie – Woody Guthrie Sings Folk Songs (1962)

Written by bluesever

Saturday, 13 August 2011 11:24 - Last Updated Sunday, 21 July 2013 15:25

---

Woody Guthrie – Woody Guthrie Sings Folk Songs (1962)

1. Hard Traveling 2. What Did The Deep Sea Say? 3. The House Of The Rising Sun 4. 900 Miles (Instrumental) 5. John Henry play 6. Oregon Trail 7. We Shall Be Free 8. Dirty Overalls (My Dirty Overhauls) play 9. Jackhammer John 10. Springfield Mountain 11. Brown Eyes 12. Boll Weevil Blues (Boll Weevil) 13. Guitar Blues (Instrumental) 14. Will You Miss Me?

In April 1944, 31-year-old Woody Guthrie discovered a recording outlet when he hooked up with record company owner Moses Asch, who agreed to let him cut a virtually unlimited number of masters informally. Guthrie simply would turn up at Asch's studios alone or with such friends as Cisco Houston, Sonny Terry, Leadbelly, and Bess Lomax Hawes, and record his repertoire of original and traditional songs. The repository soon grew to hundreds of titles, far more than even a major label, much less a tiny independent, could release contemporaneously. Over the decades, Asch did release many of the tracks, but by 1962, when he assembled the LP Woody Guthrie Sings Folk Songs, he still had a significant caché of unissued material like that found on this disc. In the ensuing 18 years, the folk revival had kicked in, and such artists as Joan Baez were taking folk music into the upper reaches of the charts. Guthrie was considered the godfather of the movement, and Woody Guthrie Sings Folk Songs played right into that, as he could be heard singing songs like "The Rising Sun Blues" (aka "The House of the Rising Sun") and "The Boll Weevil," the same songs that the new generation of folk singers were performing in coffee houses. In truth, with the combination of guitars, mandolin, harmonica, and fiddle, plus Houston's rough high harmonies, the arrangements often were more evocative of the old-timey country string bands of the '30s, such as the Monroe Brothers, than early-'60s urban folk. Then, too, although some of the songs were credited to Guthrie as a songwriter, this was not the Guthrie of "This Land Is Your Land," but rather Guthrie the traditional folk singer. Still, Woody Guthrie Sings Folk Songs was an excellent representation of rural folk music that consolidated Guthrie's position as the newly fashionable genre's main progenitor. ---William Ruhlmann

Woody Guthrie – Woody Guthrie Sings Folk Songs (1962)

Written by bluesever

Saturday, 13 August 2011 11:24 - Last Updated Sunday, 21 July 2013 15:25

---

These recordings are all excellent with great sound quality. Even though alot of the songs on this disc have been released on the asch recordings 4 disc set, they are different versions....for example, the opening song "Hard Travelin" has been released a few different times but this version has Cisco Houston helping out and singing back-up. For me, the Songs "Will You Miss Me", "Brown Eyes", and "John Henry" are reason enough to own this album. --- Ben Moore
"LowLight"

download: uploaded anonfiles mega 4shared mixturecloud yandex mediafire zidd
u

back