

Johan Helmich Roman – Solo Concertos (1994)

Written by bluesever

Wednesday, 18 August 2010 13:31 - Last Updated Monday, 14 April 2014 22:13

---

Johan Helmich Roman – Solo Concertos (1994)

Violin Concerto F minor BeRI 52

Oboe Concerto B-flat major BeRI 46

Flute Concerto G major BeRI 54

Violin Concerto D minor BeRI 49

Oboe d'Amore Concerto D major BeRI 53

Elisabeth Wallfisch (violin)

Lisa Beznosiuk (flute)

Anthony Robson (oboe)

Orchester of the Age of Enlightenment

Anthony Halstead (conductor & Harpsichord)

Johan Helmich Roman (October 26, 1694 - November 20, 1758), sometimes called the "Father of Swedish Music", brought the High Baroque style of Johann Sebastian Bach and George Frideric Handel north, synthesized what he knew of the new style gallant and trends in music making in Paris and Italy, and developed a style all his own. He is responsible for bringing large-scale, public concerts to Sweden, a country somewhat behind the times in those days. He became a violinist with the Swedish Court Orchestra in 1711. From 1716 to 1721, Roman studied in London where he was exposed to the music of Handel, Pepusch, Bononcini, Ariosti, etc.) Upon his return to Stockholm, he was named Assistant Court Conductor and by 1727 he was elevated to Principal Court Conductor. Beginning in 1721, he instituted the first public performances of concertos, suites, and sinfonias, and by 1731 he was staging oratorios in Stockholm. In 1744, he wrote his most famous work – The Drottningholm Music. By 1745 deafness had forced him to resign his position at the court, though he remained an active composer. In 1751, following the death of King Fredrik I of Sweden, Roman composed and conducted the burial music as well as the coronation music for the new royal couple. In 1758, the "Father of Swedish Music" died of cancer.

Johan Helmich Roman – Solo Concertos (1994)

Written by bluesever

Wednesday, 18 August 2010 13:31 - Last Updated Monday, 14 April 2014 22:13

---

He wrote seven solo concertos for violin, oboe, and flute, and more than three dozen extremely advanced sinfonias in addition to his more popular and better known festive suites for Drottningholm and Golovin. His mastery of contrapunctal writing is demonstrated in several of his wonderful trio sonatas. Roman's musical style was a unique combination of forward-looking elements and old-style forms. ---classical.net download: uploaded yandex 4shared mediafire solidfiles mega zalivalka filecloudio

nornar
anonfiles
oboom

back