Orchestra of the Age of the Enlightenment Sir Charles Mackerras - conductor

Soprano Danielle de Niese's debut disc for Decca was a collection of Handel arias, presumably designed to capitalise on her success in the Glyndebourne production of Giulio Cesare. If this follow-up is intended to demonstrate that De Niese is an equally persuasive Mozart singer, it's not all that convincing, and does more to underline her vocal limitations than display her versatility. With Charles Mackerras and the OAE providing unfailingly stylish accompaniment, there's a bit of everything here - the sacred arias Exsultate Jubilate and Laudate Dominum, three concert arias and extracts from the Da Ponte operas, as well as numbers from Idomeneo and Il Re Pastore. But while De Niese glitters and charms as Zerlina in the Là ci Darem la Mano duet from Don Giovanni, in which she is joined by Bryn Terfel, no less, she sounds underpowered in Elvira's Fuggi il Traditor from the same opera, and too often rather pushed (and fractionally out of tune) elsewhere. --- Andrew Clements, guardian.co.uk
