

Karłowicz - Rebirth Symphony- Bianca da Molena (2011)

Written by bluesever

Saturday, 31 December 2016 15:28 -

Karłowicz - Rebirth Symphony- Bianca da Molena (2011)

Symphony in E Minor, Op. 7, "Odrodzenie" (Rebirth) 1. I. Andante - Allegro 00:18:41 2. II. Andante non troppo 00:11:54 3. III. Vivace - Molto meno mosso - Tempo I 00:05:44 4. IV. Allegro maestoso - Allegro ben moderato 00:10:31
Bianca da Molena, Op. 6
5. Prologue - 00:10:57 6. Intermezzo (Scenenmusik) 00:04:25
Warsaw Philharmonic Orchestra Antoni Wit – conductor

Best known today for his sumptuously Romantic symphonic poems, Mieczysław Karłowicz completed his most ambitious work, the 'Rebirth' Symphony, in 1903. Like Mahler's 'Resurrection' Symphony, premièred eight years earlier, it evokes the soul's spiritual struggle against fate from tragedy to triumph. The resplendent Prologue from Karłowicz's music for the play The White Dove leads to a serene Intermezzo. Polish conductor Antoni Wit brings out the brooding, portentous and lyrical characteristics of his compatriot's richly orchestrated yet seldom-heard scores. ---naxos.com

Of the tragic composer deaths on record, the cake for most unusual may be taken by that of Mieczysław Karłowicz, who was caught in an avalanche while on a ski trip in the Tatra Mountains. He was of the increasingly often performed Polish generation that came of age in the late 19th century, and he wrote several symphonic poems that were, like Richard Strauss' Also sprach Zarathustra, influenced by the writings of Nietzsche. Strauss was but one influence on his music; the two works here take Tchaikovsky as a model, and it was partly these multiple derivations that caused Karłowicz to fall into obscurity after World War I. Yet he doesn't ape his models, and he's worth another listen. The youthful Serenade, Op. 2, marries an attractive concision to a sort of fin de siècle nervousness that emerges over the course of the piece, as if

Karłowicz - Rebirth Symphony- Bianca da Molena (2011)

Written by bluesever

Saturday, 31 December 2016 15:28 -

the opening march can't quite put its confidence across. Sample the tripartite Waltz movement (track 3). The Violin Concerto in A major, Op. 8, carries less of Karłowicz's distinctive personality but is an entirely assured handling of the idiom of Tchaikovsky's concerto, with some lovely melodies, all contained in a slightly smaller framework ideal for presenters or players who might want to offer a concerto as an opener. Russian-born violinist Ilya Kaler is equal to its considerable technical demands, and the Warsaw Philharmonic Orchestra under Antoni Wit adds to its strong series of performances on the Naxos label. These works are not as distinctive as the others by Karłowicz that have lately appeared, but they're certainly of interest to Polish music lovers. ---James Manheim, domkultury.com

Karłowicz is a true late-romantic with his orchestral works adopting a big Wagnerian sound. In the case of the present disc, the resonantly active acoustic of BBC Studio 7 in Manchester complements and enhances the Straussian luxury of the music. I say Strauss ... in fact there are also strong resonances of Elgar (Froissart, In the South). Listen to Bianca da Molena (in fact the Symphonic Prologue from Music for the White Dove) written in 1900. This is regal-tragic music sumptuously thundered out and ending in both tired repletion (Strauss's Don Juan) and glowing radiance. --- Rob Barnett, musicweb-international.com download (mp3 @320 kbs):

yandex 4shared mega mediafire zalivalka cloudmailru uplea ge.tt

back