

Albert Ayler – In Greenwich Village (1987)

Written by bluesever

Thursday, 06 October 2011 18:15 - Last Updated Monday, 14 July 2014 18:56

Albert Ayler – In Greenwich Village (1987)

01. For John Coltrane - 13:38 02. Change Has Come - 6:22 play 03. Truth Is Marching In - 12:37 04. Our Prayer (Donald Ayler) - 4:43

Personnel: - Albert Ayler - alto saxophone (01-04) - Alan Silva - bass (01,02) - Bill Folwell - bass (01-04) - Henry Grimes - bass (03,04) - Joel Friedman - cello (01,02) - Beaver Harris - drums (01-04) - Donald Ayler - trumpet (03,04) - Michel Sampson - violin (03,04) 01 and 02 recorded at Village Theatre, February 26, 1967. 03 and 04 recorded at Village Vanguard, December 18, 1966

During 1967-69 avant-garde innovator Albert Ayler recorded a series of albums for Impulse that started on a high level and gradually declined in quality. This LP, Ayler's first Impulse set, was probably his best for that label. There are two selections apiece from a pair of live appearances with Ayler having a rare outing on alto on the emotional "For John Coltrane" and the more violent "Change Has Come" while backed by cellist Joel Friedman, both Alan Silva and Bill Folwell on basses and drummer Beaver Harris. The other set (with trumpeter Donald Ayler, violinist Michel Sampson, Folwell and Henry Grimes on basses and Harris) has a strong contrast between the simple childlike melodies and the intense solos. However this LP (which was augmented later on by the two-LP set The Village Concerts) will be difficult to find. --- All Music Guide

One of the giants of free jazz, Albert Ayler was also one of the most controversial. His huge tone and wide vibrato were difficult to ignore, and his 1966 group sounded like a runaway New Orleans brass band from 1910.

Albert Ayler – In Greenwich Village (1987)

Written by bluesever

Thursday, 06 October 2011 18:15 - Last Updated Monday, 14 July 2014 18:56

Unlike John Coltrane or Eric Dolphy, Albert Ayler was not a virtuoso who had come up through the bebop ranks. His first musical jobs were in R&B bands, including one led by Little Walter, although oddly enough he was nicknamed "Little Bird" in his early days because of a similarity in sound on alto to Charlie Parker. During his period in the army (1958-1961), he played in a service band and switched to tenor. Unable to find work in the U.S. after his discharge due to his uncompromising style, Ayler spent time in Sweden and Denmark during 1962-1963, making his first recordings (which reveal a tone with roots in Sonny Rollins) and working a bit with Cecil Taylor. Ayler's prime period was during 1964-1967. In 1964, he toured Europe with a quartet that included Don Cherry and was generally quite free and emotional. The following year he had a new band with his brother Donald Ayler on trumpet and Charles Tyler on baritone, and the emphasis in his music began to change. Folk melodies (which had been utilized a bit with Cherry) had a more dominant role, as did collective improvisation, and yet, despite the use of spaced-out marches, Irish jigs, and brass band fanfares, tonally Ayler remained quite free. His ESP recordings from this era and his first couple of Impulse records find Ayler at his peak and were influential; John Coltrane's post-1964 playing was definitely affected by Ayler's innovations.

However, during his last couple of years, Albert Ayler's career seemed to become a bit aimless and his final Impulse sessions, although experimental (with the use of vocals, rock guitar, and R&B-ish tunes), were at best mixed successes. A 1970 live concert that was documented features him back in top form, but in November 1970, Ayler was found drowned in New York's East River under mysterious circumstances. ---Scott Yanow, allmusic.com download: uploaded yandex 4shared mediafire solidfiles mega zalivalka filecloudio anonfiles

oboom

back