

Al Di Meola - World Sinfonia III - The Grande Passion (2000)

Written by bluesever

Friday, 15 April 2011 09:23 - Last Updated Sunday, 13 July 2014 13:02

---

Al Di Meola - World Sinfonia III - The Grande Passion (2000)

01. Misterio
02. Double Concerto
03. Prelude: Adagio for Theresa
04. Grande Passion
05. Asia de Vuba
06. Soledad
07. Opus Green
08. Libertango play
09. Azucar play

Credits:

Al Di Meola – guitars, dumbek, cymbals, percussion
Mario Parmisano – piano, synthesizer
John Patitucci – acoustic bass guitar
Arto Tunçboyacıyan – vocals, percussion
Hernan Romero – guitar, charango, vocals
Toronto Orchestra – strings, woodwinds
Fabrizio Festa – conductor
Gilad – percussion
Gumbi Ortiz – congas
Mike Mossman – trumpet
Oscar Feldman – tenor saxophone

Fusion firebrand Al Di Meola continues his passion of the 1990s, compositions written and inspired by Astor Piazzolla. What's remarkable is how strong Di Meola's own music sounds next to those of the late Brazilian tango avatar. "Misterio" opens the album and sets the tone with a lush, romantic setting for acoustic guitar interpolated with colorful accents of sitar and winds, triggered by Di Meola's MIDI-guitar. It's a dynamic piece that takes unusual twists, and it sits

Al Di Meola - World Sinfonia III - The Grande Passion (2000)

Written by bluesever

Friday, 15 April 2011 09:23 - Last Updated Sunday, 13 July 2014 13:02

---

comfortably next to Piazzolla's "Double Concerto," which follows. Again, using his strangely uncredited MIDI-guitar, Di Meola emulates Piazzolla's inimitable bandoneon sound. The guitarist has assembled a phenomenal group, including bassist John Patitucci, percussionists Gumbi Ortiz and Arto Tunçboyacıyan, pianist Mario Parmisano, and second guitarist Hernan Romero.

With the virtuosity of his playing, Di Meola is often overlooked as a composer, and The Grande Passion underscores what a fine composer he is. String arrangements color "Double Concerto," the title track, and several other pieces, but Di Meola hardly needs orchestral frills to legitimize his already epic compositions. The guitarist has slipped from critical prominence since the days of Return to Forever, Splendido Hotel and the guitar trio with John McLaughlin and Paco De Lucia (try out Friday Night in San Francisco for a great trio outing), but Di Meola spent the 1990s doing some of his best work with his World Sinfonia group and The Grande Passion starts the new millennium in fine form. ---John Diliberto, Editorial Reviews download: uploaded yandex 4shared mediafire solidfiles mega zalivalka filecloudio

anonfiles
oboom

back