Natalia Lafourcade & La Forquetina

Natalia La Fourcade has joined her own band for Casa, the jangly and mature follow-up to her 2003 self-titled debut album. That may seem like a step backward for La Fourcade, but it makes perfect musical sense. She has known the trio that comprises La Forquetina since high school and toured extensively with them in support of her critically acclaimed first disc. That connection makes Casa a tight, focused affair: it incorporates cruchier guitars, heavier percussion and more thoughtful lyrics than its predecessor. La Fourcade has weathered constant comparisons to fellow edgy divas Nelly Furtado, Shakira, and Julieta Venegas, but the earthy vibe of Casa is all her own. "En Tus Ojos" is a pleading opener, the precious title track bounces on a wistful pop groove, and "Alimento" is a fragile highlight. It's all framed by a casual rock vibe, but there's enough musical diversity inside this Casa to put a smile on anyone's face. --Joey Guerra,
