In short, Johnny's album (partly recorded in Los Angeles) is packed with potential hits. The title track has already been released as a single and, after being bombarded on the French airwaves for weeks has, not surprisingly, rocketed up the charts. Concocted with a little help from Calogero and his team, the song pays tribute to Johnny's loyal army of fans, the singer admitting that he is "only the sum of all those arms stretched out to me, all those beating hearts." Another French music star, Francis Cabrel has also written a song specially for Johnny, a slower bluesy number on which the veteran rocker recounts the daily life of a star with a few well-placed tremolos in his voice. Je n'appartiens qu'à toi - penned by France's new teen rock'n'pop idol Raphael - is probably the most outstanding track on the album. And love it or hate it, it is guaranteed to bring yet more tears to fans' eyes with its gentle piano notes and emotion-charged lyrics.

Ça ne finira jamais features more than its fair share of guest stars, involving contributions from Johnny's son David, Christophe Maé, the French slam artist Grand Corps Malade and the young British soul star Joss Stone. Yet somehow these rock ballads have more of a standard run-of-the-mill feel. Johnny has obviously sweated a little less over the making of this new
