Let's go back to New York City yesterday for a fourth compilation! Wild Jimmy Spruill (1934-1996) is born in Fayetteville (North Carolina) among a sharecropping family, learning the guitar while listening to Country Music radio programmes, a strong and lasting influence. When arriving in New York in 1955, Spruill is already a masterful guitarist and quickly finds the path of the local studios, particularly those of Bobby and Danny Robinson for whom he recorded a lot of sessions. His clean, sharp, precise, virtuoso and expressive guitar is on the forefront of many records and Hits by Dave Cortez, Wilbert Harrison, Bobby Lewis, The Shirelles, Noble Watts & June Bateman ... He also records some 45s under his name that are highly rated by blues fans all over the world. Anyway, Spruill is certainly not confined to the blues genre and those loving his style should certainly lend an ear to those great Country guitarists of the era like Hank Garland, Joe Maphis or Jimmy Bryant who are in similar style than Spruill. We have gathered here almost all of his recorded output (under his name that is) but, despite our and friends' efforts, I'm still missing three titles. Thanks to anyone who would own it and willing to share on this blog. Rediscovered briefly by some British collectors in the 1980's, Spruill died from a heart attack in his Motel room while he was on tour in the Southern States. We have included also here the only single by the Charlie Lucas Combo in which Spruill is heavily featured. In fact, Lucas was the one-time bass player of the regular Jimmy Spruill's band.

Walter Rhodes (1939-1990) came also from North Carolina to New York at the end of the 1950's. He plays guitar and harmonica on several sessions, recording as a member of The Memos, a vocal group and then under different names (The Blonde Bomber, Little Red Walters, Walter Rhodes), alternating blues and more rock or even pop-oriented pieces. We have gathered all his recordings minus one title (Cotton Pickin') that would be nice to feature here if anyone is willing to share. Rhodes has also been rediscovered in the 1980's, touring Europe quite often as a surprising country blues solo acoustic number. He waxed two excellent albums in this style for the Dutch Swingmaster label. ---Gérard Herzhaft, jukegh.blogspot.com
