Roland Wilson – director

Dietrich Buxtehude (1637-1707) was one of the most prolific composers of his time, his scope including liturgical music, cantatas and oratorical works for services and concerts, solo arias and organ preludes, fugues, toccatas, chorale variations and fantasias, and chamber music including nineteen keyboard suites.

This oratorio represents a major, heretofore unknown vocal work by this great North German composer that all baroque fans may enjoy. Although its origin is sketchy, it may well have been written for the 'Evening Music' series of public concerts that Buxtehude organized and promoted at his church in Lubeck. It survived only a set of incomplete parts, but thanks to extensive scholarly work and research by Koopman, we now have his very impressive reconstruction of it premiered on these discs. This is like no other Buxtehude you've ever heard before, because it's very lyrical with passages that are quite operatic.

Though it is arguable that Buxtehude was Bach's greatest precursor, it would be foolish to think of his vast output merely as a preparation for Bach. Buxtehude's music deserves to stand at the summit of his age in its own right. --- George Peabody "Ariel" (U.S.A.)
