

Johann Krieger – Trio Sonata (2002)

Wpisany przez bluesever

Piątek, 05 Listopad 2010 16:35 - Zmieniony Niedziela, 26 Styczeń 2014 12:46

Johann Krieger – Trio Sonata (2002)

1. Sonata Prima in D minor
2. Sonata Seconda in E minor
3. Sonata Terza in F major
4. Sonata Quarta in G major
5. Sonata Quinta in A minor
6. Sonata Sesta in B flat major play
7. Sonata Settima in B minor
8. Sonata Ottava in C major
9. Sonata Nona in G minor play
10. Sonata Decima in D major
11. Sonata Undecima in A major
12. Sonata Duodecima in C minor

Parnassi Musici:

Margaret MacDuffie (violin);

Matthias Fischer (violin);

Matthias Müller (viola da gamba);

Hubert Hoffmann (archlute);

Helene Lerch (organ, harpsichord)

This CD is a major addition to the limited discography of German Baroque composer Johann Philipp Krieger, who was born in Nürnberg in 1649 and died in Weisenfels in 1725. This puts him more than a generation before Johann Sebastian Bach (1685-1750). Despite Krieger's apparent readiness to travel – he spent several formative years in Copenhagen, and journeyed to Italy later in the 1670s – I've come across no evidence that he and Bach ever became personally acquainted.

Johann Krieger – Trio Sonata (2002)

Wpisany przez bluesever

Piątek, 05 Listopad 2010 16:35 - Zmieniony Niedziela, 26 Styczeń 2014 12:46

Like Bach, Krieger made contributions to many genres. There are operas (he wrote 18 of them, of which none survive today), many cantatas (similarly lost to posterity, with a few exceptions), and instrumental music, including works for organ. In addition to the trio sonatas recorded here, there is a set of sonatas for violin, viola da gamba, and basso continuo, published in 1693. Martin Lubenow's booklet notes are not quite precise about this, but it looks as if Krieger himself specified the use of an organ to serve as the basso continuo in Sonatas #1, 2, and 9, and the harpsichord in the rest. (Lubenow prepared an edition of these sonatas for Musiche Varie.) On the other hand, Parnassi musici appears to have made the decision to add viola da gamba (plus or minus lute) to the basso continuo in all of the sonatas, with the exception of Sonata #3. Sonically, it was a happy decision. The ear immediately responds to the richness of the basso continuo in the very first sonata, in which the viola da gamba, the lute, and the organ blend together most attractively, providing a complementary setting for the two violins.

Each sonata requires about five minutes to play. The sonatas are sectional, but they are not divided into clearly distinguishable movements. Krieger's travels are reflected in these trio sonatas. Although the primary style is German, one can detect hints of an Italian influence as well.

The members of Parnassi musici are Margaret MacDuffie and Matthias Fischer (violins), Matthias Müller (viola da gamba), Hubert Hoffmann (archlute), and Helene Lerch (organ and harpsichord). MacDuffie, Fischer, and Lerch are members of the Bavarian Chamber Orchestra Bad Brückenau. They all play period instruments. While the interpretations are sober, the tonal richness of the playing ensures pleasure. Furthermore, with the different instrumentation from sonata to sonata, the ear doesn't grow tired of the music.

download: uploaded yandex anonfiles 4shared solidfiles mediafire mega filecloudio
nornar

back